Overview

Cybersecurity is now a board-level risk.

Executives are accountable for:

- Cyber risk oversight
- Budget allocation for security controls
- Regulatory compliance
- Incident response readiness
- Reputation protection
- Business continuity

However, many senior leaders:

- Receive overly technical briefings
- Lack practical governance perspective
- Struggle to interpret risk metrics
- Are unsure what questions to ask security teams
- Do not clearly align cybersecurity with business strategy
- Have limited structured incident oversight frameworks

Without executive-level understanding, organizations risk:

- Poorly prioritized security investments
- Weak governance structures
- Inadequate incident readiness
- Regulatory exposure
- Strategic misalignment

There is therefore a strong need for a practical, governance-focused executive program that equips CEOs, board members, and senior management with strategic cybersecurity leadership capability.
